

First full day of Reach Program Three! After enjoying breakfast in college with their new friends, the students were guided to their classrooms, eager to begin. Reach Cambridge offers a wide array of subjects to cater to the diverse interests of our students. From Psychology to Biotechnology, Architecture, and many more, there's truly something for everyone!

Following their morning classes, the students had some well-deserved free time to explore Cambridge and grab lunch before regrouping for the afternoon's activities. With a variety of restaurants, shops, and food stalls, Cambridge offers our students plenty of choices!

The students could win points for their team by taking the most creative photos at each spot, this program featuring King's Chapel, and the Senate House (photos of which can be seen on Instagram using the hashtag #reachcambridge2024)! This was also a great chance to gain points for the respective teams of Fire and Ice, in which every student is placed into, and is a recurring competition throughout the programs (with prizes!).

After a busy afternoon of tracking down clues, the students had some free time to rest before dinner and the first evening lecture of the program. What better way to kick things off than with the One-Drum workshop, led by master Ghanaian drummer Abass Doodoo. Abass once again delivered a magnificent workshop for the new cohort, teaching them to drum in the traditional way it had been passed down to him through generations. It was a perfect finish to the first full day of the program!

We then all headed to one of the colleges' outside spaces for some huge icebreakers. The students formed into a circle for massive games of splat and broken telephone! It was a great way for those who have not met yet to get chatting and bond with each other. The new cohort then made their way back to college to get some sleep after a busy day of exploring, socialising, and of course, drumming!
